Alumni In The News

UH Alumni Rosie McVeigh, Class of 2014, was recently featured on the ETSU Webpage, Spotlight Section.

Rosie McVeigh, a native of Tennessee's oldest town, Jonesborough, took a year and a half off between graduating from University School, located on the ETSU campus, and beginning her studies at ETSU. During that time, she traveled to Nicaragua, lived in Miami and worked as a model. Now a senior anthropology major with minors in both culture and health, and Spanish, McVeigh puts her academic interests to work in her hometown at the Ardinna Woods Arboretum. She holds a good deal of responsibility as an intern at the arboretum, which she manages. In making sure it is properly maintained, she works with Future Farmers of America students from nearby David Crockett High School, who visit the arboretum several times a semester to help clean up the walkways and weed the lots, and she coordinates an "Adopt-a-Plot" program. UH Alumni Craig Thompson, Class of 1972, was recently featured in the Johnson City Press. Craig has traveled extensively throughout the United States, taking photos of areas that are less traveled. The details in the photos are breathtaking. View complete article on Johnson City Press Website
